

UMI® Dissertation Publishing

2.7 million graduate works. 700 active university publishing partners.
Accessed by thousands of academic libraries worldwide.

Start here for an ever-growing world of knowledge

Dissertations and masters theses can represent some of your institution's most valuable intellectual assets.

Access by the academic community to this vital scholarly work builds reputations, extends impact and advances research.

While you focus on educating your graduate students and supporting their research, ProQuest as the experts in dissemination and preservation, offer a simple, cost-effective way to publish your institution's doctoral dissertations and masters theses.

"We gained quality assurance by publishing our business school dissertations with UMI. We choose UMI because it is a well-established organisation and we consider it to be the international standard."

Waranan Srijaiwong

DBA Coordinator at the Graduate School of Commerce, Burapha University, Thailand

ProQuest: Serving the Scholarly Community since 1938

ProQuest's UMI Dissertation Publishing has been the publisher of record for graduate dissertations and theses for over 70 years.

Leading international academic institutions and all of the top-ranking US research universities, as defined by the Carnegie Foundation, publish their graduate works with UMI Dissertation Publishing.

Institutions that publish with UMI recognise the value of publishing in the database of record and making their research available to a wide international academic audience.

"Now we submit our dissertations electronically in English to ProQuest UMI Dissertation Publishing, which is easier and reaches a much wider audience. The publishing programme is a good way to get Semmelweis University's research into the hands of the wide academic community. Discoverability of PhDs is increasingly important in an internet-focused world, particularly in emerging research centres. It has clear advantages for both young researchers and their advisors."

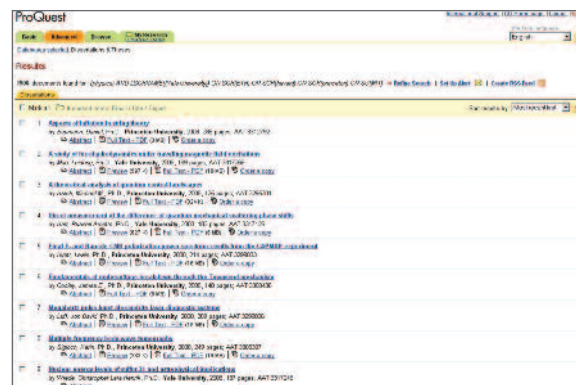

Dr. Livia Vasas

General Director, Semmelweis University Central Library, Hungary

International Impact, Global Reputation

By publishing with UMI, your institution and your students' research will be globally visible. Currently thousands of institutions, including the world's leading universities, subscribe to ProQuest® Dissertations & Theses (PQDT).

In recognition of its importance as a repository for graduate work, the PQDT database has been made the designated digital archive for the United States Library of Congress for dissertations, the first time an external site has been recognised as the keeper of a key collection.

Publishing Dissertations and Theses with UMI®

Graduates worldwide publish their dissertations and theses to an international academic audience with UMI, the world's oldest and most authoritative online source of graduate works.

This unique service enables universities to publish, archive and disseminate their graduate research within a secure and managed environment. Copies of the documents are kept in both digital and microform formats, which are stored within climate and humidity controlled vaults. Retrospective digitisation is also possible to create a comprehensive collection of scholarly works that is easily accessible to researchers anywhere in the world.

Subject feed to major bibliographic databases

Increase Author Visibility, Enhance Access to Research

Inclusion in the ProQuest Dissertations & Theses Database (PQDT)

Each work published is given an ISBN reference and listed on the PQDT database, the largest single source for information about doctoral and master's theses. It contains over 2.7 million citations, the earliest of which dates from 1637, and is searched over 200 million times each year. More than 1.2 million dissertations are in PDF.

Citations in leading subject indexes

Increasing visibility of your research further, UMI provides dissertation citation feeds to many subject indexes including ABI/INFORM™, ERIC™, PsycINFO, CINAHL, ProQuest Sociological Abstracts, Chemical Abstracts and more.

Open Access options available

With the new Open Access publishing option, graduate students can now publish their dissertations and theses with UMI on an open access basis for readers worldwide to access free of charge. Those graduate student authors that choose to publish their graduate works Open Access are able to maximise the dissemination of their research.

Simple Submission and Administration

Publishing dissertations and theses with UMI provides:

Editorial review: All dissertations and theses are reviewed by UMI's editorial staff, ensuring that key descriptors and subject terms are applied to maximise discoverability. Further, UMI inspects each work for completeness and a cursory review of the appendices is conducted for copyright compliance before publishing.

Copyright: UMI will manage filing of copyright registration with the US Copyright Office, if desired.

MARC records: MARC records are generated by UMI for every submission, and provided free of charge at the request of your institution's library. This enables institutional records to be kept up-to-date and ensures consistent cataloguing of manuscripts.

A unique ISBN: This enables easy identification by libraries and researchers worldwide.

Archiving: Many libraries have extensive paper archives of historical research, which takes up valuable space and can be costly to maintain, as well as being 'invisible' to the wider academic community. UMI can convert these works into microform or digital format and include them in the publishing programme, making an institution's entire archive of historical dissertations and theses available.

Sales and royalties: Authors earn royalties whenever copies of their dissertations are purchased in any format. (This does not apply to dissertations and theses published Open Access.)

Metadata indexing on Google: Users of the search engine will be able to locate dissertations and theses within the ProQuest database from a search on Google Scholar.

Institutional access: Institutions publishing dissertations with UMI benefit from free full-text access to all dissertations and theses originating at the home institution.

Simple submission: An easy-to-use online submission process enables easy uploading of documents to a dedicated website.

Support for multiple languages: UMI can accommodate dissertations in all languages, provided they are submitted in PDF with English-language abstracts.
